950-798 Individual Studies

I. Course Justification

Some students in the MCS masters degree program will have special needs or interests making it beneficial for them to satisfy their elective credits requirement by studying material not covered by other university courses. This course provides those students with the opportunity to study a wide variety of such topics under the direction of a faculty member.

II. Relationship to Program Objectives

Students in the MCS masters degree program come to the program with considerable work experience and often with particular training needs which would aid them in their current employment. This course is provided for students whose goals include the study of information systems topics not provided in the regular course offerings of the major.

III. Budgetary Impact

The Individual Studies course would only be offered by an instructor offering their time in addition to regular load. Therefore, there would not be any added costs.

IV. Programs Affected in Other Academic Units
